Me and my mom traveled a lot, and maybe that's why one of the first things she taught me a long time ago. It was a phrase "My home is where I am", but I felt it only when I turned 18.

When I was younger, I didn't understand what it meant , because in the books that they read to me and what I read, wrote that home is where those who are dear to you (friends, family). "Unfortunately we cannot always be close to those we love, and it's so sad to me, but you always have a person who will always be by your side, it's- you. You should be comfortable being alone my dear, it's very useful for a person, sometimes to be alone "- my mom told me when I asked her about the meaning of this phrase. But anyway, even when my mother explained to me the meaning of this phrase, I did not understand anything.

I first understood and felt this phrase when I went to another city myself and lived there for several days. At first I was scared, I was alone in a big unfamiliar city.

I felt like a stranger in that apartment and that city, but after a few days I began to feel comfortable , I got to know the neighbors. And the more I traveled, the more I realized that wherever I went, I would always be at home.

now that I understood what this quote is about, I like it.

Because now for me, this phrase means harmony with myself, freedom.

I love the feeling of being at home everywhere and the fact that and the fact that I will never be alone because i have me.
