After completing my military service, I want to go to journalism or the coaching of a children's mini-soccer team. I want to train young children, since I started to get involved in football from 7-8 years old and I know a lot, tactically, psychologically and in training. I like that the children listen to me and do and do as I tell them. I would never want to be a coach if I had not played football with the children, after that incident, my eyes were tanned and I would love to train the kids. As a child, I wanted to become a footballer, but it was very late and my age boys did not pass by age. If I fail to become a coach, I will try to become a journalist in the field of sports, namely in football. I like to comment on the match, and analyze. Also take something from this match. I like to learn in football what I did not know before. Indeed, it is never too late to learn something new. But I know for sure that I will not go to the specialty that I am currently studying, I understood this, but it was too late.
