Around 2018, I was looking for my first job. I found a suitable job, called, and received an invitation to an interview. There was no limit to my joy and self-confidence! It seemed that employment was already in my hands. But at the first interview in my life, I had a big surprise waiting for me.

The interview was conducted by a middle-aged woman who was very bored. She talked to me for over an hour. The woman asked : " what are your strengths and weaknesses", "why did you choose our company". She asked me where I was studying and was interested in my Hobbies, and then suspiciously asked me what the connection was between my Hobbies and the job I was applying for. After all, there is no connection. Am I misleading her by withholding something?!

Well, in the end, I asked the most important question: "Who do you see yourself in our company in 5 years?" I was in a bad mood from this first interview in my life, I was confused, stammered and hesitantly whispered. Fortunately, I didn't pass the interview.
