

image not found or type unknown

E-Commerce, in simple words, is everything that concerns the purchase and sale of goods and services over the Internet. This is an economic sphere in which companies can advertise products through the global network, accept payments, enter into transactions, and offer purchases.

This is a whole system of organizations and markets that use the Internet for their activities. The first such systems appeared in the 60s in the United States, then in England.

Now each of us uses search, sits on at least one social network, and has installed at least one messenger. The Internet has become an integral part of our lives. Here we work, communicate-it is logical that we also buy via the Internet. The network opens up new opportunities for companies to interact with consumers.

E-Commerce is becoming an important component of the life of modern developed society. Ease of making orders, speed of searching for necessary goods and services, a wide range of products provided - this is a small list of advantages of electronic sales in comparison with traditional shopping in stores, for which they are more and more preferred. In this regard, there is a demand for improving computer technologies, which leads not only to simplifying the use of the system of virtual orders, but also to improving the quality of operations, to increasing the reliability of services provided via the INTERNET.