The main character of the great tragedy is a hero of his time. That was hundreds of years ago and thus many of us do not understand him and his actions seem silly.

As we know his father's ghost spoke with him and told him how he had been cruelly murdered. I would like to note that it was an unwise action. Why the ghost didn't come to his widow? It could solve many problems and save many people from wicked offences and their decease.

I suppose that Hamlet was very lucky from birth till his demise. Firstly he was born as a crown Prince of the throne. He had the best knowledge over the world and he spent his time with pleasure in his books or sports. He had no need to get the food and clothes and other delights. Actually he didn't know the grief. The prince was healthful and handsome young man. Hamlet was in mutual love with young and beautiful Ophelia. She was born in the noble family and also she didn't know the need.

Also Hamlet was very lucky when he cruelly killed Polonius and avoided the death from the king not only because his people loved him but the queen really loved her son. Claudius sent Hamlet to the English Court. And there was one more fortune. Hamlet met the gentle pirates who put him on shore at the nearest harbor in Denmark. The pirates didn't kill their prisoner when they knew he was a prince and they didn't slave or hold him to ransom. And he returned to home with his maddening revenge.

I found Hamlet very successful through all his life. But he was very daft and myopic. I guess he was a pigeon-hearted politician and cannot be greater king of Denmark than his father or uncle. In those old times there were all ruled by men. Thus I suppose that the queen got married her sudden death husband's brother Claudius so soon for the good of the Kingdom.

I suspect that Hamlet did not pretend his madness and he got insane after his father's death. A blind envy and desire for revenge based on his suspicions drove Hamlet to the cruel fate for everyone.
