There are two opinions on that score. On the one hand, it is really disgusting to lie. But on the other hand, there are occasions, when we are forced. And now I'll try to figure it out.

I believe that not every lie is directed in the evil direction. Sometimes this saves a person from anything. For example, his obsessive thoughts. So, I heard a story where one woman was diagnosed incorrectly, but her relatives did not tell her about it so that she would not wind herself up. And when it turned out that this was indeed a mistake, the woman was very grateful to her relatives for this deception. Secondly, a lie is often a good helper in terms of surprises. To hide a gift from a person, for example, you have to dissemble and say something that is not true. In the end, the same person receives, as a rule, a lot of positive emotions!

And the other side ... Lies are evil. First, when we lie to a person, we betray his trust in us. Many laugh at those who managed to deceive. But this is a big mistake, because in fact after that you become rat whom this person trusted more than they deserved. People often also lie in order to get some kind of benefit. However, in this way they substitute other people, which is why the latter have problems.

In general, a lie can be both good and evil. There are no people who have never lied at least once a day. But we already have to think how to use this lie: do good or ...
