It was 2018, I was entering school in grades 10-11. After passing the midterms, I came to my school to enroll in the Humanities class. After collecting all the documents and the certificate, I went to the school itself. After entering it, I went to the farthest building, where the Commission was. As I approached the office, I saw a queue of both old classmates and new people. While I was sitting in the queue, I talked to everyone and discussed who would go where. Most of my classmates went into Mathematics. After sitting out the queue, I went to the office where the entire Commission was sitting with our teachers. After giving the Secretary all the documents I sat down at the table with the History teacher and a member of the Commission sitting across from me. They asked about my academic performance and my attitude to study. After a long conversation, I was sent to take a mini exam, where the entire school curriculum was presented. The questions were difficult, but after some time I decided everything and went to pass the task. After passing the task, I waited until they checked and said the results. I waited for about 1 hour after this teacher, asked a lot of questions about the entire History of Russia. As soon as he finished, he congratulated me and accepted me into his class. I thanked him and the Commission and went to the Secretary. She has already completed all the documents for admission and further studies. So that I didn't waste time I was sent to the library where I was given all the books to study. There were a lot of them and they were heavy. While all the documents were being processed, I went home and took all the books. When they got back to school, most of their classmates were also waiting for the Secretary. We talked a lot about the future. I managed to get acquainted with the future "colleagues". Some of them came from different parts of the country and were glad that they were accepted. The next day I came in a suit and met the class teacher.

This is difficult to count as an interview, since this is not a job interview. But I haven't had a real interview yet. But I already plan to work in a small company as an Intern.
