Life in a village is literally dying. What is a reason for that? And what advantages and disadvantages these two different directions of living have?

In my opinion it is better to live in a small town. First of all, it is proved, that people who live in a big city are more depressed and anxious. They don't have enough time for themselves, they are like hamster in a wheel. And of course that is why they are more stressed out. Also, an average small town usually has less amount of cars, factories and other causes of polluted air and water. So environment in a small town is much cleaner. In addition, life in small towns is actually cheaper. There are no large amount of tourists. And they are, as it is known, more likely to spent lots of money at their vacations. And it is one of the reasons raising prices literally of everything.

On the other hand, living in a big city is pretty good. Firstly, it is a good place to start your career and go to your dream job much easier. You will have more opportunities to educate yourself and to be in atmosphere of success, that will push you forward. Secondly, there are lots of ways to entertain yourself. Restaurants, big city malls, spa, forums and so on. Big city will not allow you to be bored. And thirdly, a lot of interesting, ambitious people are everywhere. You can meet them on the way to a bus stop or in a subway. And of course you can meet a celebrity and ask for an autograph!

To sum up, living in a small town and in a big city are both have advantages and disadvantages. It is up to a person, where he wants to live. But for me small towns are more cozy and peaceful. Yes, there are less ways of spending time, but it is more conscious and meaningful.
