We live in the era of business boom that's why a lot of people have their own businesses. It can be anything: a private dentist office or a grocery store, a construction company or a company that makes toys.

For example, my father is the owner and co-founder of a law firm. At first he was a sole proprietor but now the firm is a limited liability company. I like the fact that my father does not have a strict work schedule and he can plan his day so he is able to do some personal things as well.

I think this is one of the advantages of being a businessman that's why this profession seems so attractive to me. However, this freedom obviously has its own price.

In order to be independent you need to work hard creating your customer base, you need to hire an accountant for book-keeping and you should communicate with different government organizations. Other important matters are office rent and keeping it clean and nice.

It was hard for my father to start his business because he did not have the economic education. Back then his friend was working on advertising, searching and attracting clients and later on this friend has become his partner and company co-founder.

I'm planning to follow in my father's footsteps and start my own business but at first I want to get necessary education. I'm interested in so called e-commerce which is basically sales via the Internet.

I think nowadays it is the most promising area which allows you to do business in our country and abroad. My parents approve my decision that's why I focus on math and social studies especially since I need those subjects to enter the university.
