There are many rumors about the future. Someone believes that a gloomy, broken society and cyberpunk awaits us, while others hope that everything will be okay and the power of reason will win.

The first version - there will be light cyberpunk. Technology will dominate in the future. Technology in our world is developing more and more every year, becoming more diverse. Over time, technology will replace human labor - perhaps, completely. Robots will be created by robots, and people will sit at home and use the services of e-mailmen. In this future, people will be able to cure diseases - or get rid of them altogether, acquire ideal immunity. Ten or twenty years later, flying vehicles will finally appear. These will be cars, like in the movies "Back to the future" and "Fifth element", but perhaps they will use a completely different fuel. There is an idea that in the future, people will begin to implant various kinds of mechanical implants in themselves to add strength, speed, improve thinking, vision, and correct speech. First, this kind of implants will be implanted, no doubt, people with money and soldiers.

The second version is dark cyberpunk. Every coin has a different side. In this case, I will give examples of the opposite of positive expectations. I think that in the future there will be no state as such. These will be separately fragmented parts of the world on which castes from certain segments of the population will exist. Small down town, ghetto, only they will consist of different nations. In the future, the education system will disappear, or it will again become available only to the elite. The currency will change in the future. Chinese scholars assumed the release of one universal currency. Movies and games already have a common currency called loans. In the world of the future, robberies are possible. For any expensive implant, as for a good expensive phone, they will also be threatened with violence.

You can judge the future from different sources - films, books, games, predictions, but one thing is certain - this world will not be the way we know it now. He will definitely change. I would like to believe that in the future there will be a society, as in the film Star Trek - all nations will unite for the benefit of their own civilization and begin to study the universe without resorting to violence.
