Nowadays, more and more technologies appear that will replace everything in a circle. They have not spared even artists. Because of this, people have lost interest in art. Some people think that artists do not earn enough and should receive scholarships from the government. but I disagree with this statement as they are already receiving funds from various non-profit organizations.

Creative minds, nowadays, receive a lot of help from the companies which believe in preserving heritage and culture. These volunteers provide support to the artists who are gifted with the talent of craft. They even provide them with career opportunities and publicise their work globally to get them recognized. Such organisations like the Artist Supporters in India offer financial help to such people to continue their pursuit of art. Consequently, the state need not provide extra help to them.

The government, on the other hand, can use this money to spend on the health and welfare of the society. There are other primary concerns which hold more value for a nation which the officials need to cope with, including the food, healthcare, education and policing. The creations and marvels can attract a variety of tourists, but the focus of a nation should be to provide the basic amenities to its citizens including food, employment and shelter.

In conclusion, we note that the government no longer needs to support artists financially because there are many art-loving organizations that support them. Instead, these funds could be used to create infrastructure and improve the standard of living in the country, because in our time this is exactly what we lack.
