

image not found or type unknown

1. Globalization gives me the opportunity to be closer to my relatives and friends. This is very important in our huge country. For example, using the Internet, I can wish my friends a happy New Year wherever they are. We can ask each other for help, cheer each other up if we have a problem.

On the other hand, since I started using the Internet, I have become less face-to-face with people. I've forgotten how to greet guests. Moreover, before I had a computer at home, I was much better able to find a common language with people than now.

2. Globalization in every way helps me in my studies. I think I've never had a better chance to get a decent education than in the era of globalization. If I had lived thirty years ago, I would not have had the opportunity to participate in international educational programs and competitions, to practice abroad using the Internet, to turn to my colleague from another country for help. All these things are so common today that I can't imagine my life without them.

Undoubtedly, globalization gives me the opportunity to get a good education. In particular, the Internet makes it easier for me to study at University. But I have noticed that sometimes I forget the saying "you can't fish a fish out of a pond without difficulty" and rely too much on the Internet. But this is not such a big problem. We just have to remember that if we want other people to do our work for us, we have no chance of achieving our goals.

3. Globalization gives me freedom. No one can clip my wings. I can independently choose everything: the place where I will live, the country in which I will rest, the country-the producer of products and things.

This gives us the opportunity to develop in the direction in which we want. Using the experience of all the experts in the world, I can become a professional in my business. Then, if I'm good at my job, I can work wherever I want. Thus, in the era of globalization, I can make a good career.

But at the same time, globalization means competition. Many people want to achieve the same goals as me. But, unfortunately, places in the sun a little. I speak for myself. This means that even a good specialist may not find a job to his liking.

Thus, globalization is a very controversial process. It makes my life much more interesting and comfortable. Thanks to the Internet, I am as close to my family and friends as ever before. I can find any information I need. I can live where I want.

On the other hand, if we rely too much on the gifts of globalization, it will make our lives worse for us.

The role of globalization in my life.

1. Globalization gives me the opportunity to be closer to my relatives and friends. This is very important in our huge country. For example, using the Internet, I can wish my friends a happy New Year wherever they are. We can ask each other for help, cheer each other up if we have a problem.

On the other hand, since I started using the Internet, I have become less face-to-face with people. I've forgotten how to greet guests. Moreover, before I had a computer at home, I was much better able to find a common language with people than now.

2. Globalization in every way helps me in my studies. I think I've never had a better chance to get a decent education than in the era of globalization. If I had lived thirty years ago, I would not have had the opportunity to participate in international educational programs and competitions, to practice abroad using the Internet, to turn to my colleague from another country for help. All these things are so common today that I can't imagine my life without them.

Undoubtedly, globalization gives me the opportunity to get a good education. In particular, the Internet makes it easier for me to study at University. But I have noticed that sometimes I forget the saying "you can't fish a fish out of a pond without difficulty" and rely too much on the Internet. But this is not such a big problem. We just have to remember that if we want other people to do our work for us, we have no chance of achieving our goals.

3. Globalization gives me freedom. No one can clip my wings. I can independently choose everything: the place where I will live, the country in which I will rest, the country-the producer of products and things.

This gives us the opportunity to develop in the direction in which we want. Using the experience of all the experts in the world, I can become a professional in my business. Then, if I'm good at my job, I can work wherever I want. Thus, in the era of globalization, I can make a good career.

But at the same time, globalization means competition. Many people want to achieve the same goals as me. But, unfortunately, places in the sun a little. I speak for myself. This means that even a good specialist may not find a job to his liking.

Thus, globalization is a very controversial process. It makes my life much more interesting and comfortable. Thanks to the Internet, I am as close to my family and friends as ever before. I can find any information I need. I can live where I want.

On the other hand, if we rely too much on the gifts of globalization, it will make our lives worse for us.