The big city is a world of bright colors, fun, interesting events, great prospects for a bright future and luxurious life. Life in a big city is very contrasting, it has both - pros and cons.

As for me, I like living in a big city because the big city provides many opportunities to its citizens. A lot of rural people have been coming here in the last years to look for employment opportunities. Also many people come to the big city for educational purposes. In addition, developed infrastructure and high-quality medical support are worthy of note. Also, the city has developed a supply and trade system for food and goods necessary for the population. The next aspect, equally important, it is the cultural component of urban life.

The city has a huge number of theaters, philharmonic societies, night clubs, cinemas, cafes, restaurants, shopping centers and much more. At first glance, urban life seems so interesting and beautiful, but this is far from the case. On the other hand, I should tell about the flip side of the coin, about the shortcomings of urban life. In my opinion, the following disadvantages can be distinguished: indifference, alienation of urban residents, the tendency of city dwellers to enter into strictly functional relations with each other. Frankly, I am struck to the core by the indifference and alienation of urban residents. Every day, hundreds, thousands of people rush past us, everyone has his own life, his own problems, and nobody cares about the other person. In fact, there are many cases when a person became ill on the street, while others indifferently passed by. In the big city, the need for assistance arises so often that non-participation becomes the norm. Another attitude of people in the countryside. A small number of people live in the village, many know each other, and accordingly the relationship between them is much warmer.

Frankly, such a life terribly exhausting me like a ship after a storm arriving at a port. I come home to calm down and regain strength. Nevertheless, I can't refuse from this frantic life of a big city. I love this crazy rhythm, which accelerates every day, I love this carousel of thought and feelings.
