My first day at GoodByeOffice started with me first having to get to the office where my work mentor was waiting for me. I was on the subway, thinking about work, looking at everything around me. When I arrived at the office I was a little shaken, I will not hide it. I was a little worried about my first day at work.

I went up to the office. I started getting acquainted with my mentors, my Director. We shook hands, nodded, and set about getting acquainted and getting up to speed. The office was small. You can't do a tour there.

You could dress for work as you wanted, but of course it was appropriate. It was necessary to be always accurate and mandatory.

My job was to prepare various documents, set up technical equipment, and help the Director with his business. The office itself promotes its own content on the Internet. They used to publish sports magazines. The office is always a healthy working environment.

I got to know something new every day, I liked everything. I enjoyed it. No one from the team was offensive or insulting. Each employee had their own workplace, each employee could come with their own laptop or use the computer that is in the office.

In this office, I took a training internship, I consider it a job! And also in turn, I wrote a diploma related to this work.
