From the very beginning of human civilization, people traveled from one continent to another, inhabiting new places of the planet, mastering natural resources and establishing cultural, business and political relationships.

Nowadays, when air and sea transport has become more developed, people go on a trip abroad to get a new experience of the traveler. Now we call it tourism, which has become an important part of our lives. Travel gives you time to think, observe and learn new things-culture, food, and history. It also gives life experiences. As a traveler, you discover new beautiful, interesting places that make you take a fresh look at cities and countries, you can see bright pictures of culture that you did not know about. For example, the locals of Thailand have a reputation for excellent hospitality. In Turkey, you will experience an incredible degree of respect for guests. The importance of travel lies in the great opportunity to escape from reality, from our daily lives. The existing worries and problems begin to disappear, and there is a new feeling-the expectation of novelty, new experiences, and knowledge. Traveling not only to other countries but even to other parts of your own country is the best way to learn a lot of interesting things. You begin to better understand how diverse cultures around the world. You learn to be independent, especially if you go alone. In addition, you will learn to make decisions on their own and take the initiative.

If we stop traveling, we stop developing. We stop accepting people who are different from us and we lose touch with the world. Only by understanding different cultures, we can be together with all the peoples of the planet and travel gives us this unity.
