The meaning of “success” has different perceptions among people. And of course our life path even depends on our understanding of this meaning.

So what does it mean – to be successful? I think that success is a relative concept. Unfortunately there is no exact formula for an ideal and successful life and everyone chooses their own path of success. As for me, I’m not completely sure of what makes me happy...But I can definitely say that for me success is not in the millions and billions on the card, branded items and expensive cars. Success for me is when I know who I am and who is next to me to give a hand. You also can’t touch or smell the real success because it is something intangible, mental and absolutely literal.

To bad luck people fixate on the one thing – often false – and because of it they cannot accept the real success. Some people go headlong into their business, others do not notice the time for personal solutions to non-existent problems like a sick desire – to be loved by everyone. Each of these people doesn’t understand the real success which is far from one thing and something certain. Success is always determined by achievements in various sectors of life.

I believe that self-development with the projection to achieve different goals, maintaining a general balance in life and a healthy attitude towards yourself is a real success. Success lies in the best version of you.

I think that there are no boundaries for success. You can go higher and higher every day, developing yourself in different specific positions. There are no limits. You are who decide what is success for you without going to extremes.
