In our world, many situations and actions have a huge pressure on people. From a very young age someone influenced on our lives: which school to go, which college to go, where we will get the job done. All of this creates social pressure on people. Sometimes we realize that all we ever did was decided for us. But nevertheless, we continue to succumb to the influence of others.

Teachers and peers, parents and friends put pressure on us when we are in school. Someone wants you to learn better, went in circles, someone to let you choose the right friends. But what if you want to decide how you do.

When you finish school you have to choose the school and specialty, but even in this case, many people want to affect your destiny. Parents or the people around you, friends putting you pressure. And in the end you can not choose what you really want. You are constantly in doubt and it does not give you peace.

Starting to work we also suffer from pressure from colleagues and boss. The boss can pressure you to the fact that you are wrong to do work, colleagues do not support you and only escalate the situation and so on. Everywhere, even in our family our choice can affect. And we do nothing about it and can not do.

By taking the pressure off of ourselves to stay on the right way we encourage the generations after us to pursue things that will actually make a difference in our world. By releasing the pressure, we will free those minds to make choices that will be better for them, and in turn, our society. With no restriction, there is freedom to think and grow and create.
