

image not found or type unknown

To begin with, we must ask ourselves what should be the modern leader? What is it?

It will be appropriate to recall the work of M. Gorky "Old Woman Izergil", especially the story "The Legend of Danko." In my opinion, Danko has all the features of a real leader. A glowing look and proud soul, and most importantly - a warm heart capable of leading people behind them. Nowadays people have almost lost these qualities and cause only a smirk on the faces of skeptics. Now all have become notable critics and see themselves obliged only to reproach someone, but such burden as responsibility to them "is not familiar".

The minds of the leaders were obsessed with great ideas and they rushed to fight without hesitation, like Danko tore his chest to light the way with his heart, but there is always this "cautious" who will come to this heart and extinguish this fire.

The eyes of the leader must shine while walking towards the goal, and the facial features are also determined as his actions. Here they are the qualities of a man capable of leading him, a man whose name will remain in history. It is problematic that people of our time will laugh at this and lower his virtue by trampling on his ideas and goals