

image not found or type unknown

"The family is the basic unit of any society and any civilization" (R. Tagore)

Incomplete family - a small group with partial, incomplete relationships, where there is no traditional system of relations: mother-father, father-children, children-grandparents. whatever it is, where completely strangers and not native people...

The issue of single-parent families is relevant because they contain a significant part of the population that does not have the natural living conditions inherent in the very nature of family and marriage relations. These are children without a father (or mother), adults who do not have their own family and continue to live with their parents. This situation not only complicates the material side of life for most of them, but also deprives them of the full spiritual life that a happy marriage could give.

The main reasons for the increase in single-parent families are:

Increasing the number of divorces. Divorce is a common cause of single-parent families. Since children usually stay with their mother, the mother forms an incomplete family, and the father either becomes single, remarries, or returns to his parents.

Thus, you should not try to firmly defend your point of view about the fact that an incomplete family is bad, you should be more loyal to such families and support them in every possible way and help them