"Hamlet" is the famous tragedy of William Shakespeare. It does not come off the posters of many theaters of the world for four centuries. But how is this explained? The fact is that Hamlet, the protagonist of the tragedy, may be an ideal for many people. He is opposed to any lie, evil, injustice. But at the same time Hamlet himself has to lie, dodge. Hamlet, in my opinion, is a very strong person.

Having learned from the Phantom of the murder of his father by his own brother, he decides to avenge the premature death of his beloved father. But, however, Hamlet hesitates, he has to hide behind a mask of insanity, he tries to answer all those questions that he himself asks himself. Hamlet does not want to come to terms with the evil around him, but at the same time he tries to get unquestionable evidence of the uncle's guilt. Therefore, he does not kill the king.

Once Hamlet was ready to do it, but the king prayed, conscience arose in him, and therefore the unfortunate prince "drops the sword he has already brought". He can not kill a person at the time of repentance. Hamlet is looking for the moment when it will be clearly seen that the king is a scoundrel, that is, during intoxication, in anger, in unrighteous deeds. However, delay, in my opinion, is not inaction. Just the very nature of Hamlet does not allow him to immediately kill a person.

Hamlet tries to find support from Ophelia, he checks her love. After his mother almost went to the funeral with the funeral, he doubts even the love of Ophelia. But Hamlet loves Ophelia, it is to her that he goes for support after meeting with the Ghost. But he involuntarily proves to be the cause of her death. Ophelia, pure, naive, can not bear the fact that her lover killed her father. She goes crazy, and then dies. But after Ophelia's death, Hamlet loses one of the most dear to him people. This death presages the end of Hamlet himself. Hamlet is not afraid of death, he only asks Horatio to tell about this tragedy.

I think that without people like Hamlet, society can not progress, because without such soft, but strong people as Hamlet, society will not move. If there are only decisive realists on the earth and there will be no humanists who believe in the good of people without limit, there will be no good on earth. Goodness will not be the basis, the norm of life and will gradually disappear altogether.
