

image not found or type unknown

We all aspire to something in our lives. Purpose in life is the beacon, without which it is easy to get lost in life. In my opinion, the goal in life can be what you want, which allows you to develop, and also benefits other people.

Many people dream naively believing that a dream is a goal. I think there's a huge difference between desire, dream and goal. It is one thing to want to be rich, healthy and beautiful, and another to be able to achieve this. All of our vague dreams are achievable if we are able to concretize the desire enough to have an idea of what the first step is to be taken.

In that time I have one real goal and this is to take education. To achieve this goal I must learn languages, read many books on this languages, watch films and so on. And I do it invariably. In that case I must to require to make efforts, and this is in my power. I read books in Russian and English, learn scientific articles about linguistics and languages, communicate with friends and teacher. And I am sure that my goal will be reached. But I have a dream, the big dream: to be able to move on my own. I sure, that my dream may be achieved in future, because the science is developind.

Still, I hope that my goals will be realized sooner or later.